Bahrain's stability 'important for US'

US House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Europe and Eurasia chairman Dan Burton said Iran's attempts to work with dissidents in Bahrain to undermine its stability is something Washington must be concerned about.

He was speaking during a hearing on Iranian influence in the South Caucasus and surrounding region.

Mr Burton, who toured the region in September, said Bahrain officials are seeking to resolve problems even though they and the US know from intelligent sources that Tehran is stirring things up there.

"Since we have great relationship with Bahrain's government, I think it is extremely important that we try and work with it as long as we have our Fifth Fleet there.

"It is in the interest of the US that we do everything we can to try and solve issues in Bahrain without giving Iran the ability to undermine and destroy that government," Mr Burton added.
